Alexandria Gazette W. B. WADDEY,

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER

A PORTABLE EAR .- In Oil City, the other day, a small boy, with his head bandaged, entered a book store and said he wanted to buy some school books. As the clerk was waiting on him, he inquired the reason his customer's head was tied up in such a shape.

"Oh," responded the boy, in a matter of fact way, "a horse bit off my ear this morning." "No!" said the clerk, doubtingly; "what was

' the trouble, anyway?" "I tell you he did bite it off," the lad said, with some warmth, "and I can prove it, too. Just you look here, now," and reaching down into his pocket, he dragged forth a wad of newspaper soaked with blood, and slapped it down on the counter. A crowd formed around the little fellow, who with great gravity and a pardonable air of triump, proceeded to unwrap the unsavory mass. Then he pulled forth a ghastly relic in the shape of a human ear evidently torn out by the roots. "There, didn't I tell you so?" he cried, exultingly. "He fetched it off at the first nip." The boy gave his name as Eagan, and said he lived on the Clapp tarm. While working in the barn the horse reached his head over the side of the stall, caught the little fel-low's ear in his teeth and chewed it off. Having thus delivered himself, the lad carefully rewrapped his precious ear, thrust it in his pocket and departed.
